

STOP BULLYING IN THE WORKPLACE

A new statewide campaign is set to tackle the modern nightmare of bullying at work.

Workers across NSW are being invited to tell their stories and give their feedback about bullying in the workplace.

Bullying, also known as “workplace harassment”, is repeated unwelcome attention that is offensive, humiliating, intimidating or threatening. Union studies indicate that bullying is the number one health and safety issue at work.

Unions NSW have been inundated with inquiries from people asking what their workplace can do about bullying. The following survey has been designed to help unions get a ‘snapshot’ of how big the problem of bullying is in NSW.

Your participation in this survey will be a big step in helping the broader campaign to stamp out bullying at work.

Copies of the survey are available from your union or online at www.labor.net.au/campaigns/bullying/bullying

Complete and return the following survey to your union delegate or union office, or send it by post to:
